Ⅰ. Executive Summary

From March 4 to 8, 2026, TogetherWeTri conducted a multi-day engagement program in Tokyo to advance U.S.–ROK–Japan trilateral cooperation through youth-led public diplomacy, strategic dialogue, and targeted institutional outreach. The program expanded the initiative's operational footprint into Japan, establishing a trilateral engagement presence across the United States, the Republic of Korea, and Japan. This directly advances U.S. strategic objectives to strengthen allied coordination and reinforce a favorable balance of power in the Indo-Pacific, consistent with Goal 3: Peace and Stability in the Indo-Pacific Region.

The Tokyo program integrated public dialogue, academic exchange, and targeted engagements with diplomatic, policy, and innovation stakeholders. Flagship events—including the Young Trilateral Leaders U.S.–ROK–Japan Cooperation Dialogue (March 6, 80+ participants) and the Trilateral Sports Diplomacy Dialogue in Tokyo (March 8, 40+ participants)—demonstrated the effectiveness of leveraging accessible, non-traditional platforms to expand participation and public engagement. These efforts reflect a resource-efficient model of public diplomacy that advances U.S. interests through scalable, partner-driven initiatives without requiring additional institutional investment.

Parallel engagements with the U.S. Embassy in Tokyo, the Embassy of the Republic of Korea in Japan, and Japanese policy and civil society stakeholders provided actionable guidance on priority sectors, including supply chain resilience, critical minerals, and emerging technology cooperation. These insights directly support U.S. economic and technological leadership (Goal 5) and underscore the role of youth-led Track 2 initiatives in aligning public diplomacy with strategic economic and security priorities.

The program advanced the institutionalization of TogetherWeTri as a scalable, multi-node trilateral platform, transitioning from discrete activities to a sustained engagement model. This approach aligns with the Administration's America First framework by leveraging trusted networks to expand U.S. influence, strengthen alliance interoperability, and deliver outcomes with minimal resource burden. By linking next-generation engagement with strategic sectors and broader societal cooperation, the program supports U.S. leadership in the Indo-Pacific while reinforcing durable, interest-driven partnerships central to U.S. security and economic priorities.

Ⅱ. Background and Reporting Context

TogetherWeTri is a youth-led public diplomacy initiative established by alumni of the U.S. Department of State's Young Trilateral Leaders (YTL) program, focused on strengthening U.S.–ROK–Japan cooperation by building next-generation networks and connecting exchange alumni, local youth, and policy-relevant stakeholders across all three countries.

Since the 2023 Camp David Summit, trilateral cooperation has deepened at the government level. Youth-led Track 2 initiatives have emerged as a practical mechanism to reinforce alignment and continuity without additional institutional burden. TogetherWeTri reflects this approach by delivering flexible, partner-driven engagement aligned with U.S. priorities while remaining resource-efficient and scalable.

The Tokyo program marked a strategic expansion into Japan, building on prior engagements in Gwangju and Busan. Tokyo provides direct access to stakeholders shaping trilateral cooperation, and the program strengthened Japan-based networks by convening participants from across all three countries.

Public diplomacy efforts were further linked to priority sectors tied to U.S. strategic competition, including AI, cybersecurity, and supply chains, while reinforcing Freedom 250 themes on democratic values and next-generation leadership.

In parallel, plans for a Japan-based branch progressed alongside the existing U.S.-based coordination hub, contributing to the development of a more structured trilateral engagement framework across all three countries.

A. Public Diplomacy Programs

The Tokyo program featured two public-facing events that served as the central platform for trilateral dialogue and outreach. Held at Lakeland University Japan, these programs brought together U.S. Department of State exchange alumni, local university students, and members of the broader community to engage in structured and interactive discussions on the future of U.S.–ROK–Japan cooperation.

1) YTL U.S.–ROK–Japan Cooperation Dialogue in Tokyo | March 6, 2026

The Young Trilateral Leaders U.S.–ROK–Japan Cooperation Dialogue in Tokyo, held on March 6, at Lakeland University Japan, convened over 80 participants in a hybrid format. The program focused on the role of youth and next-generation leadership in shaping trilateral cooperation, with discussions examining how regional perspectives, public understanding, and leadership pathways can contribute to more sustained and inclusive collaboration among the three countries.

2) Trilateral Sports Diplomacy Dialogue in Tokyo | March 8, 2026

The Trilateral Sports Diplomacy Dialogue in Tokyo, held on March 8, at Lakeland University Japan, engaged over 40 participants and explored the role of sports as a practical platform for trilateral cooperation. The discussion connected past and upcoming Olympic host cities across the United States, the Republic of Korea, and Japan, and examined how major sporting events can serve as vehicles for international exchange, local-level cooperation, and long-term partnership building.

Both events emphasized an interactive format, with open discussion and Q&A sessions that enabled participants to directly engage with speakers and one another. This approach facilitated candid exchanges on the opportunities and constraints surrounding trilateral cooperation and contributed to a more grounded understanding of how such cooperation can be operationalized beyond formal policy settings.

B. Strategic and Institutional Engagements

As part of the Tokyo program, TogetherWeTri conducted a series of targeted institutional engagements with policy, diplomatic, and innovation stakeholders in Japan. These engagements were designed to assess the current landscape of trilateral cooperation from a Japan-based perspective and to identify areas for continued collaboration with actors positioned at the intersection of policy and public diplomacy.

1) Embassy of the Republic of Korea in Japan | March 5, 2026

TogetherWeTri (TWT) met with Minister Counselor (Public Diplomacy) Lee Jung Ho and Second Secretary Lee Hawon at the Embassy of the Republic of Korea in Tokyo to assess the current trajectory of U.S.–ROK–Japan trilateral cooperation and identify areas for near-term engagement. Embassy officials reaffirmed sustained political commitment to trilateral coordination and emphasized strong public demand for cultural diplomacy in Japan, noting that programs routinely reach capacity within days. They encouraged TWT to put forward concrete, implementation-ready initiatives and indicated willingness to facilitate follow-on engagement, including coordination with the Embassy of the Republic of Korea in Washington, D.C.

The discussion also highlighted a clear opening to expand trilateral cooperation into economic security domains, including AI, critical minerals, and supply chain resilience, with potential pathways for private-sector involvement. While the absence of a formal trilateral secretariat remains a structural limitation, it also creates space for agile, non-governmental actors to shape engagement in a flexible and scalable manner. Taken together, these signals point to an immediate opportunity to scale visible trilateral programming in Japan while linking public diplomacy efforts to sectors directly tied to U.S. economic competitiveness.

This engagement demonstrates a practical, resource-efficient pathway to strengthen alliance cohesion and expand U.S.-aligned networks in the Indo-Pacific. It advances core U.S. priorities by leveraging high public receptivity in Japan and connecting trilateral cooperation to strategic industries, consistent with the Department's FY2026–2030 Strategic Plan and the Administration's emphasis on targeted, interest-driven diplomacy that delivers measurable impact without additional institutional burden.

2) U.S. Embassy Tokyo (PAS & POL) | March 5, 2026

TogetherWeTri (TWT) met with Public Diplomacy Officer Sarah Belousov (Public Affairs Section) and First Secretary Juan Manuel Cammarano (Political Section) to identify Department-relevant themes for future trilateral programming. Embassy officials highlighted supply chains, critical minerals, and pharmaceutical vulnerabilities as priority areas tied to reducing strategic dependencies, particularly on China. They also pointed to energy and maritime security as areas where the Embassy is already actively engaged and where trilateral programming could be readily integrated.

A key takeaway was the need to align programming with evolving U.S.-Japan policy messaging, particularly following Prime Minister Takaichi's recent visit to Washington. Embassy representatives emphasized reviewing updated joint statements to identify shifts in priority language and ensure relevance to current policy direction. PDO also underscored Freedom 250, university partnerships, and alumni engagement as practical entry points that can be leveraged immediately without additional institutional setup.

This engagement offers clear direction for calibrating trilateral initiatives toward policy-relevant sectors while maintaining a flexible, low-resource approach. It reinforces a targeted model of public diplomacy that supports U.S. strategic positioning in the Indo-Pacific and aligns with Department priorities

3) Japan National Diet Tour and Meeting with HoR Koki Ozora | March 6, 2026

TogetherWeTri (TWT) organized a guided tour of the Japan National Diet, followed by a closed-door lunch meeting at the Second Members' Office of Representative Koki Ozora, the youngest-ever elected member of Japan's House of Representatives and a leading advocate for accessible mental health care. The engagement provided insight into Japan's legislative environment and the perspectives of emerging political leadership.

The discussion focused on key social challenges facing Japanese society, including mental health, youth well-being, and demographic shifts. Participants examined how these issues intersect with governance and policy frameworks. The exchange highlighted the importance of inclusive and forward-looking approaches to public service. It also underscored the role of youth leadership in shaping policy discourse and contributing to more responsive and people-centered governance.

4) Japan-America Student Conference (JASC) | March 7, 2026

TogetherWeTri (TWT) met with representatives of the Japan-America Student Conference (JASC) to explore potential collaboration on youth-led programming and broader network linkages. During the discussion, both sides identified a concrete opportunity to collaborate with the 2026 JASC conference in Tokyo (June), marking JASC's return to its summer conference cycle. The conversation evolved toward the possibility of incorporating a trilateral component into the program, combining JASC's established U.S.–Japan dialogue platform with TWT's focus on U.S.–ROK–Japan cooperation.

The discussion highlighted education, cultural exchange, and public diplomacy as the most immediate and scalable entry points for trilateral engagement, particularly given strong institutional and youth participation structures in Japan. At the same time, both sides recognized the value of gradually linking these efforts to broader strategic themes, including regional security awareness and economic cooperation. The potential June collaboration represents a near-term opportunity to operationalize this approach by expanding an existing platform into a trilateral format with minimal additional resource requirements.

Looking ahead, both sides discussed follow-on engagement during JASC's expected visit to the United States in August 2026, including potential coordination with TWT's U.S. branch. This creates a pathway to extend collaboration beyond a single event into a sustained, cross-border youth network.

5) GR Japan | March 5, 2026

TogetherWeTri (TWT) held a luncheon meeting with GR Japan, the leading government relations and public affairs consultancy in Japan, to gain insight into the country's policy and stakeholder engagement landscape. The delegation met with the firm's President & CEO, as well as Director Tommy, whose opening remarks and discussion provided a comprehensive overview of how strategic government relations are practiced within a dynamic and evolving policy environment.

The discussion highlighted GR Japan's structured and targeted approach to engagement, emphasizing the importance of identifying the right stakeholders and entry points within complex policy ecosystems. This perspective provided practical guidance for TWT's ongoing work in public diplomacy and trilateral cooperation, particularly in aligning engagement strategies with policy-relevant actors and sectors. The exchange underscored the importance of cross-sector collaboration and reinforced the role of strategic networks in advancing U.S.–ROK–Japan cooperation in a resource-efficient and scalable manner.

C. Academic and Policy Exchange

In parallel with public programming, the Tokyo engagement incorporated a series of academic and policy-oriented exchanges designed to deepen the analytical dimension of trilateral dialogue and strengthen linkages with Japan-based research and education institutions.

1) Temple Univ. Japan, Institute of Contemporary Asian Studies | March 5, 2026

A central component of this effort was a joint seminar conducted in partnership with the Institute of Contemporary Asian Studies (ICAS) at Temple University Japan Campus. The session was led by Professor Benoit Hardy-Chartrand, whose expertise in East Asian geopolitics and security provided a strong analytical foundation for the discussion.

The seminar convened students, researchers, and program participants for a structured discussion on the evolving landscape of U.S.–ROK–Japan cooperation, with a focus on how historical context, domestic political dynamics, and regional security considerations shape trilateral alignment. The joint format enabled direct engagement between academic and practitioner perspectives, reinforcing the role of universities as platforms for sustained Track 2 dialogue.

The program also incorporated an interactive roundtable component, where participants developed forward-looking proposals on priority areas including public health resilience, cybersecurity and emerging technologies, cultural diplomacy, and trilateral education exchange. These discussions reflected strong interest in expanding cooperation beyond traditional diplomatic channels and demonstrated the capacity of youth-led platforms to generate policy-relevant ideas aligned with U.S. strategic priorities.

Participants highlighted the need for enhanced coordination on pandemic preparedness, digital governance, and cross-border exchange programs, emphasizing practical and scalable approaches that can be implemented through existing institutional and academic netw orks. The exchange further underscored the role of Track 2 engagement in connecting next-generation perspectives to broader policy and strategic discussions, contributing to more resilient and forward-looking trilateral cooperation.

2) Meeting with Professor Yasuyo Sakata and Ms. Misato Nagakawa | March 7, 2026

The delegation held a closed meeting with Professor Yasuyo Sakata at Kanda University of International Studies and Ms. Misato Nagakawa, Deputy Director of Wake Up Japan, at Hosei

University Ichigaya Campus to exchange perspectives on the role of academic and civil society actors in advancing trilateral cooperation. These discussions highlighted the role of student-led and civil society networks in sustaining cross-border dialogue and fostering long-term engagement among emerging leaders. Participants emphasized the continued importance of Track 2 platforms in strengthening mutual understanding and maintaining continuity in U.S.–ROK–Japan cooperation across political cycles.

Collectively, these engagements strengthened the intellectual and institutional grounding of the Tokyo program by linking youth-led dialogue with established academic and student-led networks in Japan, while also identifying opportunities for continued collaboration in education, research, and people-to-people exchange.

IV. Key Outcomes and Reporting Highlights

1. Expansion of Trilateral Engagement into Japan-Based Networks

The Tokyo program successfully extended TogetherWeTri's trilateral engagement into Japan by activating local academic, student, and policy-adjacent networks. By convening participants in Tokyo and integrating Japanese stakeholders into program activities, the initiative moved beyond Korea-centered programming and established an initial trilateral footprint within Japan. This expansion strengthens the geographic and institutional balance of the initiative and positions it for sustained engagement across all three countries.

2. Validation of Youth-Led Track 2 Engagement as a Practical Complement to Alliance Cooperation

Discussions across public events and institutional meetings consistently underscored the value of youth-led Track 2 engagement in supporting trilateral cooperation. Participants emphasized that next-generation platforms can reinforce continuity, expand public understanding, and create space for dialogue on issues that may not be addressed through formal channels. The Tokyo program demonstrated that such engagement is not only symbolic, but can serve as a functional layer that complements official alliance coordination.

3. Advancement of Institutionalization Efforts through Japan Branch Development and U.S. Hub Operations

The program contributed to strengthening the institutional foundation of TogetherWeTri by advancing plans for a Japan branch while leveraging the U.S. branch. These developments mark a transition from event-based programming to a more structured and scalable model of engagement. The establishment of these nodes provides a framework for continuity, enables more consistent stakeholder engagement, and supports the long-term sustainability of trilateral initiatives.

4. Alignment with the U.S. Mission Priorities through Embassy Engagement and Policy-Relevant Dialogue

Engagements with officials from the U.S. Embassy in Tokyo, including Public Diplomacy and Political Section officers, provided an opportunity to align program activities with U.S. mission priorities in Japan. Discussions addressed a broad range of topics related to trilateral cooperation and public diplomacy, and highlighted areas where youth-led initiatives can complement ongoing embassy efforts. These exchanges reinforced the relevance of TogetherWeTri as a partner capable of contributing to mission-aligned outreach and engagement.

5. Demonstration of Multi-Sector Pathways for Trilateral Cooperation

The program highlighted the potential for trilateral cooperation to expand beyond traditional policy domains into areas such as education, civil society engagement, and sports diplomacy. Through public dialogue and academic exchange, participants explored how these sectors can serve as practical entry points for collaboration, particularly at the subnational and community levels. This multi-sector approach supports a more flexible and inclusive model of trilateral cooperation, consistent with broader U.S. public diplomacy objectives.

6. Reinforcement of Forward-Looking Trilateral Narrative Aligned with Freedom 250

Program discussions incorporated forward-looking themes consistent with Freedom 250 messaging, including the role of youth leadership, democratic values, and civic engagement in sustaining alliance partnerships. By linking trilateral cooperation to broader narratives of shared values and future-oriented collaboration, the program contributed to shaping a more accessible and durable public understanding of U.S.–ROK–Japan relations.

V. Policy-Relevant Insights and Follow-On Opportunities

1. Institutionalizing a Trilateral Youth Platform Across Japan, the United States, and the Republic of Korea

The Tokyo program underscored the importance of transitioning from event-based engagement to a sustained, institutionalized trilateral platform. With a U.S.-based coordination hub already operational and plans for a Japan-based branch advancing, TogetherWeTri is positioned to establish a multi-node structure capable of supporting continuous engagement across all three countries. This framework enables regularized dialogue, coordinated programming, and sustained network development among U.S. government exchange alumni and local stakeholders.

From a policy perspective, this model offers a scalable mechanism for reinforcing trilateral cooperation at the societal level, complementing formal alliance coordination with a structured Track 2 layer. Institutionalizing this platform would allow for greater continuity across political cycles and provide a stable channel for engaging next-generation leaders in support of U.S.–ROK–Japan priorities.

2. Expanding Trilateral Engagement through Subnational Programming in the Republic of Korea

Building on insights from Tokyo, TogetherWeTri plans to expand its programming across multiple cities in the Republic of Korea, including Seoul, Jeju, and Pyeongtaek. These locations were identified as strategic nodes for subnational engagement, offering distinct opportunities to connect local communities, universities, and regional stakeholders to trilateral cooperation.

This approach reflects a shift toward geographically distributed engagement, enabling broader participation and more context-specific dialogue. By anchoring trilateral cooperation in diverse local settings, the initiative can help translate high-level alignment into practical, community-level interaction. Such efforts are consistent with U.S. public diplomacy objectives to broaden outreach, deepen people-to-people ties, and ensure that alliance cooperation is understood and supported beyond capital-level institutions.

3. Strengthening Coordination with U.S. Mission and Allied Diplomatic Networks in Japan

Engagement with the U.S. Embassy in Tokyo and the Embassy of the Republic of Korea in Japan highlighted opportunities for closer coordination between youth-led initiatives and official diplomatic efforts. The Tokyo program demonstrated that TogetherWeTri can serve as a flexible partner in supporting mission-aligned outreach, particularly in areas related to public diplomacy, youth engagement, and trilateral awareness-building.

Follow-on opportunities include structured collaboration with embassy-led programs, co-hosted dialogues, and targeted outreach to university and alumni networks in Japan. Over time, such coordination could enhance the effectiveness of existing engagement efforts by integrating a Track 2 component that is both locally grounded and trilaterally connected.

4. Leveraging Education, Civil Society, and Sports Diplomacy as Entry Points for Practical Cooperation

Program discussions in Tokyo reinforced the utility of non-traditional sectors—including education, civil society engagement, and sports diplomacy—as practical entry points for trilateral cooperation. These domains provide accessible and politically sustainable platforms for engagement, particularly in contexts where formal policy coordination may face constraints.

Expanding programming in these areas would allow TogetherWeTri to diversify its engagement model while maintaining alignment with broader U.S. strategic objectives. In particular, sports diplomacy and educational exchange offer opportunities to connect trilateral cooperation with widely recognized platforms, including upcoming major international events, thereby increasing visibility and public resonance.

5. Supporting a Forward-Looking Trilateral Narrative Anchored in Shared Values and Next-Generation Leadership

The Tokyo program demonstrated that there is strong interest among participants in framing trilateral cooperation in forward-looking terms that emphasize shared democratic values, civic engagement, and youth leadership. This narrative aligns with broader U.S. messaging priorities, including Freedom 250, and provides a foundation for communicating the relevance of trilateral cooperation to wider audiences.

Sustaining this narrative through continued programming and engagement will be critical to maintaining public support and ensuring that trilateral cooperation is not perceived solely as a policy-level construct. By embedding this messaging within youth-led initiatives, TogetherWeTri can contribute to shaping a more durable and widely understood vision of U.S.–ROK–Japan partnership.

VI. Monitoring and Evaluation

The Tokyo program reached a broad and diverse audience through both in-person and hybrid participation formats.

- The Young Trilateral Leaders U.S.–ROK–Japan Cooperation Dialogue (March 6) engaged over 80 participants, including U.S. Department of State exchange alumni, university students, and local stakeholders.
- The Trilateral Sports Diplomacy Dialogue in Tokyo (March 8) engaged over 40 participants, with strong representation from student and community audiences.

Across both events, participants demonstrated a high level of engagement, particularly through active Q&A sessions and sustained discussion. The hybrid format enabled expanded participation beyond the immediate Tokyo area, increasing accessibility and outreach.

In addition to public programming, the delegation conducted multiple institutional engagements with diplomatic, academic, and policy stakeholders, further extending the program's reach and relevance. Overall, the Tokyo program successfully combined targeted institutional engagement with public-facing dialogue, contributing to both depth and breadth of trilateral outreach.

VII. Conclusion

The Tokyo engagement marked a significant step in expanding TogetherWeTri's trilateral initiative into Japan and advancing its transition toward a more structured and sustainable platform. By integrating public diplomacy programming, academic exchange, and institutional engagement, the program demonstrated a practical model for reinforcing U.S.–ROK–Japan cooperation through next-generation leadership and Track 2 dialogue.

The program's outcomes highlight the value of youth-led initiatives in supporting alliance objectives, particularly in areas related to public engagement, continuity, and multi-sector collaboration. The establishment of a U.S.-based coordination hub and the advancement of a Japan-based branch further position TogetherWeTri to scale its activities and maintain momentum across all three countries.

Looking ahead, continued expansion through subnational programming in the Republic of Korea and deeper coordination with U.S. missions and allied partners in Japan present clear opportunities to build on this foundation. Sustained support for such efforts would contribute to strengthening trilateral cooperation in a manner that is both resilient and responsive to evolving regional dynamics.
